

Opinion: The reason I think New York City changed the hours that the subway is closed.

New York law enforcement has completely lost their minds. That includes the New York FBI, NYPD, Nassau County Police Department, and others.

New York law enforcement is getting paid regardless if we all starve or not. Personally, I think they would prefer that a lot of us starve.

In my opinion, New York law enforcement talks with whoever is in charge and says, let's close the subway for X hours per night. New York law enforcement can care less if we all drop dead.

Here are two examples of why I think that:

1. Are there any neighborhoods that you would be cautious to walk through at night? Why? The United States goes overseas and secures some of the most dangerous places. Why can't they secure America? Why should one person live in a safe neighborhood and another person is unsafe? One reason is that law enforcement and the bureaucrats who direct them can care less about us.

2. When I walk around Midtown Manhattan at night, I don't see enough NYPD officers in the streets, in their cars, etc. I think there are too many NYPD members drinking coffee and eating sandwiches at the precincts instead of patrolling the streets. How many police officers are being paid to sleep in the precincts at night? How many do you see in the street? You tell me.

If you are a regular productive person, you will probably have difficulty imagining what law enforcement is really up to. For example, tampering with people's food, setting people up, having girls hook up with people and say they mistreated them, etc. That's a big part of the day for some, not all, of law enforcement.

When New York City closed the subway from 1 AM to 5 AM they said it was to clean it. I will say that I did see a lot more cleaning than in the past. I just disagree that the subway had to be closed to be cleaned.

How many subway stations do they clean at the same time? Even at the height of the cleaning or now, I look into subway stations to see what's going on at night and the majority of the time there is no one cleaning.

The reason I suspect New York law enforcement told the city to close the subway from 1 AM to 5 AM for so long is so more of the police can sleep at night. The police have a lot of people under surveillance. If people can't move around the city, the New York FBI, NYPD, etc., don't have to follow them around the city as much at night.

Also, civilians don't know that regular people who work for the police conduct a lot of the surveillance done by the NYPD. The NYPD, NCPD, and others have a large number of civilians running around for them. I call them the NYPD civilian lie and scam team.

The NYPD has civilians they use to follow people around, pick fights with people to get them in trouble, rob people, and hook up with people and say they were assaulted. If I had to guess, the number of civilians that the NYPD has working for them off the record is in the tens of thousands. They are throwing our tax dollars in the garbage.

If you are doing anything illegal, I suggest you stop. The US government has so many informants working for them it's not even funny. All ages, female, male, etc. The government has whole families working for them.

When I heard the subway will soon change the hours they are closed, I suspect I know why. Of course, it's impossible to prove.

I'm not naming names because it's not essential. I suspect high power business owners in New York City went to the powers that be and said, what the hell is going on? If you don't open the subway, we will leave and take a lot of money out of the city.

New York law enforcement would have kept the subway closed from 1 AM to 5 AM forever if you let them. Now New York law enforcement has to spend more time following people like me around every night. People I know pay the police to harass me every day including today.

That's just my theory. I don't know this for a fact. Let me know if you agree or not.
